Dessert Run—Las Chiches at Night

Edited by George W., Editor

The following are two reports from the July Full Moon Desert Run on Las Chiches provided by the original trailboss and the on-the-fly secondary Trailboss.

From John J.:

For those of you who didn't make the run it was quite interesting. We met up in Margarita and 12 rigs showed up.

We made it to Turkey Flats and aired down. Well we made it to the trail head and everyone made it up on the trail.

A few miles in one of the rigs spun a drive line. So 6 rigs were kinda together so we all stayed to help. At this point the group got separated. So we got the drive line off and decided to turn around because we had a rig with 2 wheel drive.

We put 2 rigs in front and 2 or 3 in the rear. We lost communications with the front group. CBs are ok but are limited.

So we made it back to the pavement, and on down to Turkey Flats. By this time it was 11:30 PM or so.

We got all the goodies out and had a great time. Around 1:00 AM we started to head for home.

Now my question is how did the first group do? I hope you made it out with no problems. We kept the CB's on Ch 4 but never could hear any one.

Anyone from group 1 please let us know how it went. I hope everyone made it home ok. We don't get separated very often, but we figured 6 in one group and 6 in the other everyone had plenty of help.

Thank you John J

From Kirk R.:

The front group followed the instruction to carry on and we did. We traveled to the rocks at the top of Las Chiches for dessert. We had variety of sweets, although I didn't partake myself, and Casey even made a pot of coffee. We arrived back in Santa Margarita at 12:45AM and also didn't hear any radio traffic from the second group.

Casey and myself discussed frustration and concern not knowing about the group we left behind hoping all was well we said our farewells and parted ways.

Glad to hear everyone made it home safe and sound as could be.

Kirk R.

Editor's Note:

CB radio's have been likened to Black Magic by some club members. There are several variables that contribute to the performance or lack of performance of a CB radio.

Most communication is limited to a few miles and usually almost line of sight.

Just buying the radio, antenna and antenna cable won't guarantee good performance unless you're real lucky.

Make sure that they are well matched and that the SWR (Standing Wave Ratio) have been adjusted properly.

Templeton 4th of July Parade

by George W., Editor

NOTE: All photos are George's photos except where noted.

The 4th of July parade started early for those of us in the club who would be participating in it. Many of us gathered early to fuel our bodies at the donut shop at the point where the parade route started on the north end of Templeton. After filling ourselves with parade food, we obtained our parade entry numbers and participant ribbons and headed for our staging location.

Once we reached our staging location we started decorating our rigs for the parade as more members and their rigs trickled in. Flags, banners, bunting and garland appeared and was affixed to the rigs in every way imaginable affixed with zip ties, tape and whatever else would hold them in place for the duration of the parade.

During the preparations we even had a "trailside repair as Keven Paine had to add air to one of his kid's stroller's pneumatic tires. Even with the noise of the air pump his son continued to nap. It never fails, there is always at least one repair.

One of the things that became very evident during our preparations is the number of children in our group. The parade is one of the times that we really get to see a lot of them as they were everywhere in our group! Great to have the little people!

Our number put as near the end of the parade, so as we continued to decorate, other parade entries started past us at 10:00 AM past. We got to see the majority of the parade go by which included many interesting entries. One of our own members, Kevin C., was driv-

Many of our members began other preparations as we watched the entries that preceded us go by. They prepared for the almost guaranteed water battles that accompanied this parade. Some were very prepared with multiple squirt guns after last years hosing.

As the numbers of the parade entries passing approached our own number, we mounted up, started out engines and prepared to join the parade of slow moving entries heading south down Main Street. This got a little complicated in that we had to cross the returning entries who were finishing the parade coming north on Main Street.

We headed south on Main St. in a single file configuration, the as we turned onto 2nd St. west bound, we changed over to a side-by-configuration with Tom and Karen B. in front with club banners flanking both sides of the Toyota. Tom was followed by his son Kenn with Kenn's son Wyatt preparing ing a military vehicle for the Estrella WarBird Museum.

We saw painted horses, cool cars and antique vehicles of many varieties.

his water firepower for the potential attacks. Kenn's wife Kim would join them shortly along the route with their newest family member.

We turned south on Crocker following the parade toward the park and the elementary school waving to many parade watchers along the way. We then turned east on 8th St and then north on Main St. Kim B. took advantage of the left hand turns to squirt her father-in-law from the passenger seat of Kenn's Toyota as the anticipated water war with the parade watchers did not materialize this year.

We continued up Main St past our staging area and, breaking into multiple groups, found places where we could park and remove the decorations from our rigs. Several of us ended up at the Beef Palace to perform this task. Once the rigs were street legal again, we went our different ways, so for home, some for other functions and some continuing the celebrations in Templeton. All in all a great outing!

Did anyone check to see if we won any of the parade awards? I don't know, I think everyone just had too much fun participating! We had a large turnout with somewhere between 17 and 19 rigs, several more than last year. That was a strong showing for any of the motorized groups!

6-7 Reasons Why Your Spouse Should Learn to Drive Off Road

Four wheeling is often viewed as a man's world. For the most part it is. Women are increasingly joining our hobby, however. Some of these women are single, but others are introduced to the hobby by a husband or friend.

In either case, it's always best for her to take an off-road driving course. And if you haven't taken a course, I encourage you to join her. It can be a fun and rewarding experience for you both.

Here are some good reasons to consider enrolling your better half in a 4WD training course.

1. She can be a back-up driver: If something happens to you, your wife could drive out. Chances are, the training course will teach her how to overcome most of the challenges she'll face on trails. Even if you're out cold, she should be able to drive you out or at least get you to an extraction point.
2. Building confidence: Learning to drive off-road entails mastering new skills. It involves unusual terrain, special driving techniques, and different equipment, like standard transmissions. Experiencing all these while under the watchful guidance of a trained instructor builds confidence.
3. Better all-around driver: Off-road skills are put to use in the city during bad weather, such as a snowstorm or heavy rain. In the aftermath of an earthquake or tornado, there could be sinkholes or debris in the roadway. Drivers need to negotiate around those obstacles. That's standard procedure in four wheeling. Someone who has taken a 4WD course is better able to handle these difficult and stressful situations.

4. Additional spotter: The best spotters are also good drivers. Having gone through a 4WD course, your wife will be able to read the trail as well as you, providing you a valuable second set of eyes. One catch, guys: If your wife starts to enjoy off-road driving, you may end up the spotter. But that's OK, right? On the other hand, your wife may still just want to sit and enjoy the ride. Encourage her to get behind the wheel on occasion to keep her skills sharp. Wait - one more catch: You may end up buying another 4 wheel drive vehicle just for her!
5. An extra driver to spell you: Driving off-road, as you know, is very demanding. Fatigue can set in after just a few hours. It's a comforting to know that a skilled driver can take over if needed.
6. Companionship on the trails: Fishing buddies are great, but you can't beat having your spouse along. You experience the adventure together, share great memories, and really bond while outdoors.
7. One of my readers, Louise, sent me two additional suggestions. They are good, and I'd like to share them with you." Valuable Team Member: When your spouse is able to drive a vehicle off-road by herself she becomes an important member of a team that may be assembled to aid another driver. Consider this situation: You and your wife are sharing driving. Another driver is solo, gets injured and is unable to drive his vehicle; he might even need to be removed from the scene for medical care. Because your travel companion knows how to drive off road, one of you can take charge of the injured person's vehicle while the other continues to drive your vehicle.
8. Keeper of the Extra Keys! Regardless of who you are travelling with and whether or not they have learned how to drive off-road you should each have a set of keys to the vehicle. While you lock the vehicle to keep all your stuff safe it also inconveniences your travel companion to access their belongings. They may need access to the vehicle at any time for a comfort item, to get out of the weather, extra clothing, water, food or medical/emergency supplies for you or someone else. With their own set of keys for the duration of the trip they can freely do this without the inconvenience of having to find you each time they want access. Consider this situation: You are away from the vehicle which you have locked. You slip, fall and become injured and need to be removed from the scene for medical treatment. With the one set of keys in your pocket, and you away for medical treatment no one can access your vehicle to drive it for you or for your travel companion to access their own items.

You both now share a new common interest, which can open a world of possibilities for you. Sitting around the house one day wondering what to do? Go off road!

Four wheel driving is more than just learning how to drive the trails. It's also about enjoying the great outdoors with family. Enrolling your spouse in a 4WD training course builds her skills and confidence, and helps her better enjoy your outdoor adventures together. Sign her up today, and start planning your next off-road adventure.
